June 2005

The College of Education is committed to making public education itself a better place. We believe that every child has the potential to achieve and succeed at whatever level. We also believe that every teacher has the potential to be the very best teacher. We offer nationally recognized degrees to prepare teachers, counselors, specialists, administrators, school psychologists, and researchers in the fields of special education, educational interpreting, educational psychology, educational technology, educational leadership, and educational administration. We are dedicated to the empowerment and advocacy of all children, and the skill of writing to and visiting with their legislators.

We Want to Hear from You

If you have any news or feedback, please let us know if you do not want to appear in the College of Education newsletter. If you are interested in submitting news for inclusion in the newsletter, please contact us.

Looking for Past Issues?

We have included refreshments, college tours, and open houses in the fall, which will begin on October 2005. Please contact us for more information. We also have available the College of Education newsletter, which includes past issues.

New That's Sage Advice

Yes, the recipients actually do get a silver computer mouse!

Let's Give Them Something to Talk About

• Kerith Morriss — Silver Mouse Award
• Karen Sesler — Silver Mouse Award

At the College of Education Staff Advisory Council Luncheon on May 18, several staff members received kudos (and a nifty cash gift!) for their contributions. The Silver Mouse Award was presented to Kerith Morriss and Karen Sesler.

From the College of Education Instruction Technology Facility, recognizing outstanding contributions to the college.

• Yvonne Gonzalez — Silver Excellence Award
• Mary Ann Bescript — Gold Excellence Award

Antonio. He also gave a speech, "Golden Opportunities: Connecting Literacy with Technology." The American Educational Research Association presented the Best Educational Technology Award from the Technology in Literacy Education Special Interest Group to Bruce Johnson, assistant professor in the Department of Teaching and Reading Education.

The College of Education bid on the." The 1997 World Series baseball championship trophy at the University of Arizona is sporting a diamond ring.

Marx told the audience that President Peter Likins directed the College of Education to the podium. Dean Marx and Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — are honored by the college.

The It Takes a Village Award went to the SaddleBrooke Community Outreach Program for their contributions to the local community.

The College of Education alumna Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — is the recipient of the College of Education Alumni Award. She has taught a generation of students the art of writing to and visiting with their legislators.

Art is in the air over the UA campus. The "It Takes a Village" sculpture, created by renowned artist Arne Johansen, has been completed and is displayed on the UA campus.

The College of Education bid on the." The 1997 World Series baseball championship trophy at the University of Arizona is sporting a diamond ring.

Marx told the audience that President Peter Likins directed the College of Education to the podium. Dean Marx and Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — are honored by the college.

The It Takes a Village Award went to the SaddleBrooke Community Outreach Program for their contributions to the local community.

The College of Education alumna Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — is the recipient of the College of Education Alumni Award. She has taught a generation of students the art of writing to and visiting with their legislators.

Art is in the air over the UA campus. The "It Takes a Village" sculpture, created by renowned artist Arne Johansen, has been completed and is displayed on the UA campus.

The College of Education bid on the." The 1997 World Series baseball championship trophy at the University of Arizona is sporting a diamond ring.

Marx told the audience that President Peter Likins directed the College of Education to the podium. Dean Marx and Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — are honored by the college.

The It Takes a Village Award went to the SaddleBrooke Community Outreach Program for their contributions to the local community.

The College of Education alumna Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — is the recipient of the College of Education Alumni Award. She has taught a generation of students the art of writing to and visiting with their legislators.

Art is in the air over the UA campus. The "It Takes a Village" sculpture, created by renowned artist Arne Johansen, has been completed and is displayed on the UA campus.

The College of Education bid on the." The 1997 World Series baseball championship trophy at the University of Arizona is sporting a diamond ring.

Marx told the audience that President Peter Likins directed the College of Education to the podium. Dean Marx and Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — are honored by the college.

The It Takes a Village Award went to the SaddleBrooke Community Outreach Program for their contributions to the local community.

The College of Education alumna Naomi Karp — the first College of Education alumna — is the recipient of the College of Education Alumni Award. She has taught a generation of students the art of writing to and visiting with their legislators.

Art is in the air over the UA campus. The "It Takes a Village" sculpture, created by renowned artist Arne Johansen, has been completed and is displayed on the UA campus.