Race, School Choice, and the Politics of Transformation

Featuring Michigan State University Assistant Professor Chezare A. Warren

Presented by the UA College of Education
Education Policy Center

Chezare A. Warren
Assistant Professor of Teacher Education
Michigan State University

Dr. Chezare A. Warren is an assistant professor in the Department of Teacher Education at Michigan State University. He also holds faculty appointments in African American and African Studies, the Center for Gender in Global Context, and Mathematics Education. Warren has about a decade of professional experience as an urban educator, and is a recipient of numerous recognitions for his scholarship, including the American Educational Research Association Division K 2018 Early Career Award. Warren’s research interests center on urban (teacher) education, culturally responsive pedagogy, and critical race theory in education. His scholarship broadly examines the factors that facilitate high academic outcomes for young black men and boys in urban schooling contexts. Author of Urban Preparation: Young Black Men Moving from Chicago’s South Side to Success in Higher Education, Warren’s research has been published in peer-reviewed journals including Race, Ethnicity and Education, Urban Education, Teachers College Record, and the Journal of Teacher Education. For more information, visit chezarewarren.com.

Monday, April 22, 5:30 - 7 p.m.
University of Arizona Integrated Learning Center
1500 E. University Blvd, Room 130, Tucson, AZ 85719

If you need special accommodations or information about parking, please contact Fernando Parra at jorgeparra@email.arizona.edu or 520-621-9578.